What is the history of the U.S.-Pakistan relationship? Given tensions this year, how is this relationship likely to evolve? What are the key security interests of both countries and how can they relate to each other? Evans is the 2011-12 Henry A. Kissinger Chair in Foreign Policy at the Library of Congress. On sabbatical from the British foreign service, he previously worked for the State Department as a senior advisor to Ambassador Marc Grossman, and the late Ambassador Richard Holbrooke. His work focuses on U.S.-Pakistan relations and the development of a political process in Afghanistan. Before joining the diplomatic service, he worked in management consultancy and journalism. He has published widely, including articles in Foreign Affairs and The Economist. A visiting senior research fellow at King’s College London, Evans is a past fellow of Yale and Oxford. He was appointed an officer of the Order of the British Empire (OBE) in 2010.
