Presents

Noah Shusterman

On

Religion, Women, and the Start of the French Revolutionary Wars

Noah Shusterman received his Ph.D. in History from the University of California, Berkeley. He is currently a lecturer in the Intellectual Heritage Program at Temple University; a program that teaches students about ancient Greece, religion, humanism, Enlightenment thought, romanticism, revolutionary theory, non-violent resistance, anti-colonialism, and global imaginings. Shusterman specializes in French and European history, as well as intellectual history and social theory. He has published in French History, and is the author of Religion and the Politics of Time: Holidays in France from Louis XIV through Napoleon (2010).

Date: Thursday, February 17

3:00 pm

Gladfelter Hall, 9th Floor, Russell Weigley Room

Contact rimmerma@temple.edu for further details