Kenneth J. Campbell is associate professor of political science & international relations and Director of the International Relations program at the University of Delaware. Dr. Campbell was born and raised in a row-house neighborhood in Philadelphia. He enlisted in the Marines after high school, serving as an artillery forward observer with a rifle company in Vietnam in 1968-1969, where he was slightly wounded and slightly decorated. He was honorably discharged in 1970 and joined the Philadelphia chapter of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War. He also enrolled in Temple University, earning a B.A. in history (1975). In 1983, after working in the private sector, he returned to Temple University to pursue graduate studies in political science, earning an M.A. (1985) and a Ph.D. (1989). His dissertation analyzed the US military’s lessons of Vietnam.

Before coming to the University of Delaware, Dr. Campbell taught at Temple University, Villanova University, Ursinus College, and Washington College. He has been recognized for teaching excellence by Temple University, the University of Delaware, the American Political Science Association, and Pi Sigma Alpha National Political Science Honor Society. He is the author of Genocide and the Global Village, as well as chapters genocide and war crimes in the Encyclopedia of Government and Politics, 2nd ed., Genocide: A Critical Bibliographical Review, 6th ed. (Transaction, forthcoming), and Give Peace a Chance: Exploring the Vietnam Antiwar Movement. Dr. Campbell has published scholarly articles on genocide, the Powell Doctrine, and the proper use of force in Civil Wars, Armed Forces & Society, Georgetown Journal of International Affairs, and Human Rights Review. He is a member of the editorial board of Civil Wars and is a book reviewer for the Journal on Genocide Research. He has been quoted in the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Philadelphia Inquirer, the Los Angeles Times, and the Christian Science Monitor, and has been interviewed on Hardball with Chris Matthews, National Public Radio’s Morning Edition, CNN’s It’s Your Call with Lynne Doyle, and WHYY’s Radio Times with Marty Moss-Coane. He is currently working on a book tentatively called Last Exit from Baghdad: The Politics of Quagmire-Extraction. Professor Campbell is married, has a grown daughter, and lives in downtown Philadelphia, where he listens to Italian opera, reads classic mysteries, and plays bad golf.
